Biography

Helen Hazard Bacon (1919-2007), Classics scholar and teacher, was born in Berkeley, California and spent part of her childhood in Florence, Italy. After graduating from Bryn Mawr College in 1940 and pursuing graduate studies at UC Berkeley and Harvard (1940-42), she joined the U.S. Naval Reserve as a Women Accepted for Volunteer Emergency Service (WAVES). She served actively until 1946, reaching the rank of Full Lieutenant. Along with fellow classicists, she worked in Washington, DC in the Navy's Communications Annex, where she was a cryptanalysist decoding Japanese radio communications.

After the service, she returned to Bryn Mawr to pursue her doctorate. She taught at Bryn Mawr and the Woman's College of Greensboro, N.C. before she joined the Classics Department at Smith College in 1953 and completed her Ph.D. in 1955. She also traveled to Greece on a Fulbright fellowship and studied at the American School of Classical Studies in Athens (1952-1953).

At Smith, she was promoted from Instructor to Associate Professor (1953-61) and served as Department Chair (1959-61). In 1960, Bacon organized Smith faculty and students on behalf of two colleagues who had been arrested and dismissed from the College on charges of possession of pornography. She managed to have the Board of Trustees reverse their decision and her colleagues received their back pay, but they were not rehired. The events are recorded in Barry Werth's The Scarlet Professor Newton Arvin: A Literary Life Shattered by Scandal (2001). After the publication of the book, and fifty years after the original events, Bacon was presented the David Burres Award for Civil Liberties by the American Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts in an April 29, 2002 ceremony at the Smith College Archives.

In the fall 1961, Bacon arrived as a Visiting Associate Professor at Barnard College's Greek and Latin department, where she would remain for the next thirty years. A few months into her first year, and with President McIntosh's support, she presented a proposal to the Committee on Instruction to merge the department's advanced course offerings with Columbia's. She was named department chair for the following year and given "full equality" so she could teach undergraduate and graduate courses at Barnard and Columbia. During her tenure as department chair (1962-1974), Bacon was instrumental in securing Barnard's sponsorship of the Center for Classical Studies in Rome, before the College had a standard policy on study abroad (1966). With the support from the Institute on East Central Europe, she added Modern Greek to her department (beginning in 1967-1968). She also joined the faculty of the Philosophy department at Columbia in 1976, and became Emeritus in 1991.

Helen Bacon wrote two books: Barbarians in Greek Tragedy (1961) and a translation and introduction of Aeschylus' Seven Against Thebes, co-authored with Anthony Hecht (1973), which was nominated for a National Book Award. William Arrowsmith, the editor of the Oxford Greek Tragedy series, contracted her for a second translation on Euripides' Suppliants with poet (and then Columbia faculty member) David Ignatow. In the summer of 1974, Bacon and Ignatow received a four-week fellowship at the Yaddo in Saratoga Springs, NY to begin the work on their collaboration.

Bacon published articles mainly on Aeschylus, Plato, Vergil and Apuleius, but also wrote on Robert Frost and Edith Hamilton. Over the summers she taught Classics in translation at the Bread Loaf School of English at Middlebury College (1966, 1968, 1973 and 1975), where she received an honorary doctorate in 1970. She was also actively involved in the American Philological Association, serving in the position of Director (1976-1979); Vice-President (1983-1984) and in 1985, as its elected President, the ninth woman to do so in over 100 years of the organization.

Collection Scope and Content Summary

Helen Bacon's papers document her research process. Her published articles and lectures are well documented; however, there are few materials relating to her two books. For Barbarians in Greek Tragedy (1961), the contents of the file are just a dust jacket, copies of reviews and some correspondence. For the National Book Award nominated translation and introduction of Aeschylus' Seven Against Thebes, co-authored with Anthony Hecht (1973), there are reviews, clippings, correspondence and notes to one lecture on the translation.

While the collection is primarily focused on Bacon's work in the Classics, there are materials related to her reading of the works of Robert Frost. Bacon also gave talks on her days in the Navy's WAVES and on her work as a consultant on a grant-funded translation project for the National Institutes of Health.

In her classes, Bacon covered a range of authors and genres, in particular Aeschylus, Plato, Vergil, and the comic novel. In addition to her work at Barnard and Columbia, there are also papers from her time at Smith and at Vassar as the Blegen Visiting Professor in the fall of 1979. The summers at the Bread Loaf School of English at Middlebury are also well represented.

The earliest materials in the collection are Bacon's student papers, written after her undergraduate degree at Bryn Mawr before joining the U.S. Navy (1940-1942). There are also journals and notebooks from her time at the American School of Classical Studies in Athens (1952-1953) and from a hiking expedition in Glacier Peak, WA (1956).

Language of the Material: Majority of materials in English, some articles and research materials in French, German, Greek (Ancient and Modern), Italian, and Latin.

Scope and Contents Note

This series contains paper proposals, drafts, revisions, research notes and bibliographies as well as conference announcements and programs. Published articles appear first, followed by lectures and papers, and notes on more informal talks, covering a wide range of subjects. In her published works files, Bacon kept a record of articles sent out for peer-review and the recipients' response. In addition, Bacon received numerous article off-prints from colleagues and former students, some inscribed or accompanied by a letter. Notable names include Nancy Felson, Helene Foley, Bernard Knox, Anne Lebeck, Deborah Roberts, T.G.R. Rosenmeyer, Charles Segal, Seth Schein, Laura Slatkin, and Froma Zeitlin. The published works by others have been arranged alphabetically.

Class Notes and Journals, 1919-2000

box 11-13

Physical Description: 0.83 Linear Feet 2 document boxes

Scope and Contents Note

This series contains materials outside of Bacon's professional papers. Included are her student papers from her early graduate student days before joining the Navy, as well as transcripts, diplomas and copies of her curriculum vitae. From her travels, there are slides from trip to Greece during the winter 1951-1952 and full journals and class notes from her time as a student at the American School for Classical Studies in Athens (1952-1953). (She revisited the School in 1990.) Also found in this series are journals of a hiking expedition in Glacier Peak, WA, in 1956, and one from a whale-watching cruise around Baja California in 1996. Materials from a symposium in her honor are also included in this series.
