Biography

Joan E. Vincent (November 18, 1928-April 21, 2018) was an anthropologist and professor at Barnard College known for her ethnographic fieldwork and research on British colonialism and its impact on colonized peoples' social, economic, and political relations. Most of her research was focused on Uganda and Northern Ireland, resulting in publications such as African Elite: The Big Men of a Small Town (1971), and Teso in Transformation: The Political Economy of Peasant and Class in Eastern Africa (1982). In 1995, she was granted the title of Professor Emeritus at Barnard and continued producing research until she died in 2018.

Joan Eveline Vincent was born in Surrey, England, on November 18, 1928. Her parents were involved in the war effort during World War II; her father, from Alsace-Lorraine, was employed by the anti-fascist French government under Charles de Gaulle, and her mother, born in India, was a former teacher turned civilian volunteer member of the Air-Raid Wardens Service. She remarked that her father's Alsatian identity and antiquarian interests influenced her focus on questions of ethnic identity and history (Nugent 1999, 531). Vincent attended teacher training college at Whitelands College in London before she traveled to the British protectorate Northern Rhodesia, modern-day Zambia, where she wrote and published fiction. She lectured in history for the remainder of her time in Northern Rhodesia before she obtained a B.Sc. in Economics at the London School of Economics in 1957, the first in her family to receive a university degree.

After graduation, she taught at the Teacher Training College of the Sultanate of Zanzibar, modern-day Tanzania. While in Zanzibar, she and her students, whom she noted were not segregated by race, conducted oral history interviews in the field, capturing perspectives of a soon-to-be former British protectorate. Outside of her teaching, she was a member of a reserve British police unit, the "B Specials," and a hospital volunteer (Nugent 1999, 532). These experiences informed her later approach to fieldwork. She left Zanzibar in 1963 to earn her master's degree in political science from the University of Chicago. As a graduate student, Vincent was critical of the representation of Africa in anthropology and focused on comparative politics and class analysis to study phenomena like labor migration and military force. In 1964, she published her MA thesis, "The Social Bases of Party Conflict in Zanzibar, 1956-1963," and began a Ph.D. in Anthropology at Columbia University (Vincent 1996, 127).

In 1966, Joan Vincent returned to Africa as a doctoral candidate and took a faculty position at Makerere University College in Kampala, Uganda, funded by a grant from the UK's Ministry of Overseas Development. While at Makerere, Vincent conducted extensive fieldwork in the Teso region. This research shaped her understanding of agrarian social systems, colonialism, and political economy, themes that would permeate her later works. Her first major publication, African Elite (1971), is a case study of societal change in sub-Saharan Africa. While organized around conventional anthropological themes—such as settlement, ethnicity, and political dynamics—it was novel in its attention to the historical impacts of monetization, colonial rule, and the development of class relations. Vincent's second book, Teso in Transformation (1982), marks a significant evolution in her analytical approach, drawing from Marxist and neo-Marxist theories. In this work, she investigates how the British colonial cash crop economy established a dependent relationship between the Teso people and the colonial state, exacerbating local inequalities and fostering a rural bourgeoisie. Vincent's analysis reflected her shift towards a historically conscious anthropology that engages with capitalist dynamics. This self-described "Africanist" period, spanning from 1966 to 1973, ultimately laid the foundation for her later research on the colonial situation in Ireland.

The regional focus of Vincent's research shifted when military dictator Idi Amin took power over Uganda in 1971. In 1973, Vincent began to research the roots of the continued political conflict in Northern Ireland after receiving a Guggenheim Fellowship (Nugent 1999, 534). In an interview, she expressed that as an Englishwoman, studying Northern Ireland allowed her work to take on a critical perspective on the history of British colonialism in Irish territory (Nugent 1999, 535). Vincent's research in this area focused primarily on Fermanagh, a county in Northern Ireland characterized by a population with political and demographic affiliations with the South (Karakasidou 1996, 2). Vincent's contributions to this subject include a critical examination of the religious arguments that have traditionally explained Ireland's conflict and political analysis of the role of British colonialism in Ireland's Great Famine (Nugent 1999, 536). Vincent also studied twentieth-century political hunger strikes in Ireland as a form of resistance to imperial domination (Karakasidou 1996, 3). In an unpublished book tentatively titled Seeds of Revolution: The Culture and Politics of the Great Famine in the Irish Northwest, she argues that British relief policy in Ireland had underlying political motives and established new class divisions in the area.

After she completed her PhD at Columbia in 1968, Vincent became an Assistant Professor of Anthropology at Barnard College that fall, where she was on the faculty for the following three decades. She was also a visiting professor at several institutions, including Hunter College, the New School for Social Research, and the University of Cape Town. She was granted the title of Professor Emeritus at Barnard in 1995 and became less active in teaching at Barnard and Columbia but continued writing, editing, and presenting her research well into the 2010s. Following a short illness, Vincent died on April 21, 2018 (New York Times, 2018).

Collection Scope and Content Summary

This collection consists of fieldwork and research materials generated and collected by Joan E. Vincent, Professor of Anthropology at Barnard College. The collection includes ethnographic fieldwork, research notes, annotated copies of primary and secondary sources, drafts of published and unpublished works, correspondence, 19th-century documents, and photographs. Vincent's work focused primarily on the impact of British colonization on the people of Uganda and Northern Ireland, and these regional focuses comprise the bulk of her professional materials. Additionally, the collection includes teaching materials, research notebooks and datebooks, and limited personal materials, including photographs and scrapbook pages.

Collection Arrangement

At the time of receipt, no apparent order of the collection by chronology or material type was evident. Some boxes contained materials related to either Uganda or Northern Ireland exclusively, but other boxes contained a combination of materials from both areas of Vincent's research.

In order to facilitate research, processing archivists organized the collection into 4 series: Series 1, Uganda Research; Series 2, Northern Ireland Research; Series 3, Professional Life; and Series 4, Early and Personal Life.

Series 1, Uganda Research, 1959-2013, contains materials generated during fieldwork, research materials, correspondence, and photographs on anthropological topics explored in the Ugandan context.

Series 2, Northern Ireland Research, 1970-2010, contains fieldwork, research materials, and drafts of unpublished manuscripts on 19th and 20th-century conflicts in Northern Ireland.

Series 3, Professional Life, 1959-2015, contains teaching materials, unpublished articles on various topics, CVs, notes for presentations, book reviews, and notebooks of professional notes and personal reflections generated during Vincent's career.

Series 4, Early and Personal Life, 1925-2015, contains scrapbooks created during Vincent's young adulthood and photographs, including family photos, childhood photos, and photos taken while traveling.

Within subseries, materials are largely organized as they were received by the archives, with some exceptions as noted at the subseries level.

Access

This collection has no restrictions.

Publication Rights

While the materials within this collection are the property of Barnard Archives and Special Collections, the institution holds no copyright or intellectual property rights over the materials, according to the deed of gift. All copyright and other intellectual property rights of Joan Vincent's work are maintained by Vincent's estate. The copyright status of secondary sources/third-party materials within the collection is undetermined. The Barnard Archives and Special Collections approves permission to publish that which it physically owns; the responsibility to secure copyright permission rests with the patron. Please contact the archives for more guidance.

Reproduction Restrictions

Reproductions may be made for research purposes.

Acquisition Information

Sharifa Zawawi, a close friend of Joan Vincent, initiated the donation of Vincent's papers to the Barnard Archives in September 2018 following Vincent's passing in April of that year. The donation was finalized in May 2019, at which time Shannon O'Neill, former Director of Archives and Special Collections at Barnard, picked up a portion of the collection from Zawawi. Following Zawawi's passing on August 6, 2019, Martha Tenney, current Director of Archives and Special collections at Barnard, picked up the remainder of Vincent's papers from Pamela Wood in November 2019.

Accruals

No further accruals are expected.

Processing History

Graduate students in the Archives and Public History MA program at New York University (Tess Derby, Katelyn Landry, Mercedes Rodrigues Lima, Sabrina Moore, and Emily Teller) processed this collection during their course "Advanced Archival Description," with assistance from Professor Martha Tenney, in Fall 2024.

The processing archivists first drew a major region-based distinction between materials related to Vincent's extensive research in Uganda and materials related to her research in Northern Ireland. Within these region-based series (Series 1 and Series 2), materials are first categorized as related to either Vincent's ethnographic fieldwork or her research on extant archival materials and secondary scholarship. The two region-based series are not identical in their subseries arrangement due to differences in extent and variety of materials.

The archives students then determined that a significant amount of materials do not directly fit into Series 1 or Series 2. Following discussion, they created Series 3, Professional Life, and Series 4, Early and Personal Life. Series 3 consists of materials related to Vincent's anthropological scholarship, as well as her role as a scholar and professor at different institutions, and her participation in conferences, panels, and talks. Series 4, Early and Personal Life, comprises any non-professional materials generated during the course of Vincent's life. Finding aid adheres to that prescribed by Describing Archives: A Content Standard. Finding aid written in English.

Appraisal

Processing archivists deaccessioned photocopies and duplicates of collection materials, as well as published primary and secondary sources that lacked substantial annotations by Joan Vincent. Processing archivists also deaccessioned manuscripts, including drafts, authored by Vincent that were eventually published. Standard practice at the Barnard Archives and other university archives, as well as consideration of researcher priorities, influenced these appraisal decisions. Processing archivists deaccessioned approximately 8 linear feet, due to the large volume of unannotated secondary sources.

Collection Inventory

Uganda Research, 1942-2013, (1966-2010)

Scope and Contents

Series 1, Uganda Research, contains fieldwork, research materials, correspondence, and photographs Vincent generated in Uganda (1966-1968; 1970; 1988; 1991).

Vincent's initial anthropological research focused on the development of the small town of Gondo (formal name is Bugondo; Vincent stylized the town as Gondo to avoid confusion with other place names such as Buganda and Budongo) within the district of Teso in Eastern Uganda, specifically its polyethnicity. She later developed her research to focus on the agricultural development of Gondo. In the late 80s and early 90s, she pivoted to study AIDS in the Rakai and Soroti Districts of Uganda, working with Dr. George C. Bond to co-author and co-edit a variety of conference papers, chapters, and books.

Subseries 1.1, Fieldwork, contains original and transcribed field notes; her inquiries conducted with Kenyi (Bantu) and Teso peoples on various topics such as family structures, farming, fishing, hunting, beer, and Big Men; and synthesized summaries of raw anthropological data resulting from her fieldwork. Subseries 1.2, Research materials, consists of annotated secondary sources, research notes, and press clippings. Subseries 1.3, Correspondence, contains letters and emails exchanged between Vincent and other colleagues, students, and her contacts in Teso. Subseries 1.4, Photographs, encompasses photographs Vincent took while conducting fieldwork in Uganda in the late 1960s, and during her subsequent visits.

Scope and Contents

Subseries 1.1, Fieldwork, contains original and transcribed field notes, Vincent's inquiries conducted with Teso residents on various topics, and summaries synthesizing the data produced by her fieldwork. Most notably, the subseries contains approximately a dozen field notebooks from Vincent's doctoral research in Teso, which she called her "Red Bugondo Notebooks." Typed transcriptions are interspersed with the original handwritten fieldnotes, along with what is believed to be a complete typed transcription of her fieldwork diaries from 1966 to 1968.

Vincent also conducted handwritten inquiries with residents of the Teso district on a variety of topics, including their farming and/or fishing practices, family structures, and opinions on local 'big men.' Through her surveys on familial connections, she traced relationships in the district. This subseries also includes summaries of this raw anthropological data.

Vincent generated fewer handwritten notes on her return trips to Teso, but Subseries 1.1 does contain spare field notes and final field reports from her trips in 1988 and 1991.

Folder titles in this subseries are predominantly Vincent's original titles (e.g. Reflections on fieldwork, Retrospective diary).

Vincent's field notes contain an Eastern Nilotic language and processing archivists suspect the non-English is written in Ateso, the language spoken by the Teso people of Uganda, or Luganda or Lusoga, Bantu languages spoken in Eastern Uganda. Generally, her field notes written in the Eastern Nilotic languages also include translation to English, but Vincent does not specify the dialect being translated.

Arrangement

Archivists grouped materials in subseries 1.1 loosely along Vincent's major periods of research in Uganda: earlier research on political economy in the Bugondo region and later research on the impact of AIDS and public health campaigns.

Scope and Contents

Subseries 1.2, Research Materials, consists of annotated secondary sources, scholarship on AIDS in Western Uganda, press clippings, and other materials related to Vincent's research in Uganda. Secondary sources include newspaper and journal articles alongside Vincent's typed notes. Also significant are the photocopied materials on the development of the Teso district in the 1920s and 1930s, including sources on trade in Gondo. Additional items include conference presentations, programs, papers, and Vincent's personal documentation from conferences she attended. Also included are Vincent's hand-drawn maps and newsletters from the Teso Development Trust. There are also a number of hand drawn maps included in Subseries 2.2, either created originally by Vincent or hand-copied by Vincent.

Northern Ireland Research, 1847-2010, (circa 1970s-2010s)

Scope and Contents

Series 2, Northern Ireland Research, consists of Joan Vincent's fieldwork, research materials, and drafts of unpublished manuscripts on 19th- and 20th-century conflicts in Northern Ireland. The majority of the materials are a product of Vincent's archival research and center on the Great Irish Famine of 1845-1852, with a focus on the famine's impact on County Fermanagh in Northern Ireland. A smaller portion of the materials focus on The Troubles of the second half of the 20th century.

Fieldwork in Northern Ireland, circa 1970s-1980s

Scope and Contents

Subseries 2.1, Fieldwork in Northern Ireland, includes materials that were produced during Vincent's fieldwork in Northern Ireland in the 1970s and 1980s. The field notes, field diaries, and interviews with subjects in this subseries primarily relate to Vincent's research on the then-ongoing Troubles.

Archival research, 1885, 1970-2010

Scope and Contents

Subseries 2.2, Archival Research, consists of notes on 19th- and early 20th-century archival sources produced by Vincent between the 1970s and 2010. These materials comprise the larger intellectual grouping of the series and include maps hand drawn and annotated by Vincent as well as historical census data from County Fermanagh and surrounding Northern Irish counties. Much of these research materials reflect Vincent's interest in genealogy, poverty, land ownership, and British famine policy. This subseries also includes small amounts of original 19th-century Irish documents and Vincent's correspondence with archivists who assisted in her research.

Early and Personal Life, 1925-2015

Scope and Contents

Series 4, Early and Personal Life, includes photographs, postcards, slides, and scrapbook pages that document Vincent's personal life from her early childhood through her later years.

Photographs, 1925-2015

Scope and Contents

Subseries 4.1 comprises photographs, postcards, and slides that Vincent apparently collected or produced throughout her life. Some photographs of Vincent's family members were taken before Vincent's birth in 1928. Several photographs from the late 20th century and early 21st century depict Vincent with her close friend, Sharifa Zawawi, at various locations. Many photographs and postcards were taken or collected during Vincent's personal travels around the world. Some of the photographs in this subseries were likely taken while Vincent was conducting fieldwork in either Uganda or Northern Ireland, however it is unclear whether Vincent took the photos for research or personal purposes.
