Biographical / Historical

Aaron W. Warner began his career as one of Felix Frankfurter's "bright young men" in the New Deal. At the age of 46, he began a more than half century affiliation with Columbia University; where he served as a professor of economics, dean of the School of General Studies during the 1970s and director of the University Seminars program. He died on August 25, 2000 at the age of 92.
