Biographical / Historical

Ainslie Embree (1921-2017) was a leading scholar of modern South Asian history and notable for his influence on the introduction of the field into United States university curricula. Born in Nova Scotia, Canada, on January 1, 1921 to Ira Thomas Embree and Margaret Embree (née Langley), Embree attended Dalhousie University in Halifax and graduated in 1941. Although he considered himself a pacifist, he joined the Royal Canadian Air Force and was assigned to Britain's Royal Air Force in England during WWII. After the war, Embree continued his studies at Dalhousie University and at Pine Hill Divinity Hall (now the Atlantic School of Theology), and was ordained as a minister in the United Church of Canada in 1946. Embree later studied at Union Theological Seminary in New York City, where he met his wife, Suzanne Harpole. The couple married in 1947, and after both pursuing graduate studies at Dalhousie University, moved to India to teach at Indore Christian College through the United Church of Canada. The couple lived in India, where both son Ralph and daughter Margaret were born, from 1947-1957. In 1957, Embree accepted a position to work with sinologist William Theodore de Bary to establish a program dedicated to the study of the Indian subcontinent within the Department of History at Columbia University; this program became one of the world's most highly regarded programs for South Asian studies. Embree received his PhD in history from Columbia University in 1960, and taught in the History Department from 1958-1969, at Duke University from 1969-1973, and again at Columbia University from 1973-1991. While at Columbia, Embree also served as Director of Contemporary Civilization of the undergraduate Asian civilization program; as Chairman of the Middle East Languages and Cultures Department and the History Department; as Director of the Southern Asian Institute; and as Acting Dean of the School of International and Public Affairs. After retiring in 1991, Embree continued scholarly activities including teaching, research, and writing at Columbia, Brown University, and Johns Hopkins University's School of Advanced International Studies.
