Historical Note

The Columbia University Library played an important role in the changing nature of the library and of American library management and administration more broadly. During the 1880s, under the direction of Melvil Dewey as the head librarian, the university became the site of the first school for professional librarian training, Melvil Dewey's School for Library Economy, which opened its doors to students in 1887. The library became a locus for the increasing professionalization of the field of library management as over the course of the 1890s, graduates of Dewey's school—many of them women—moved into staff positions within the library. The 1890s marked the beginning of a period of transformation in the structure of Columbia University and its library. In the 1890s, the university established a number of its professional schools and graduate schools. Under the leadership of George Baker, from 1889-1899, the Columbia University Library expanded its collection, and James Hulme Canfield oversaw the growth of the library from the small library of Columbia College to the large metropolitan research library.

Series I. Correspondence, 1899-1926

Scope and Contents

The records that comprise the Columbia University Library Office Files, Correspondence (1898-1926) include the institutional correspondence and related professional material from the office of the university librarian and other members of the library staff. The files track a series of changes in the university library's administration, beginning with the movement of the library uptown in 1898 to its new location within Low Library in the Morningside Heights campus and conclude in 1926 with the hiring of a new permanent head of the library, Charles C. Williamson, after a series of interim library directors. During this period, the library underwent significant changes with the institution of new efficiency measures, changes in classification systems and record-keeping (as the library instituted a modified version of the Dewey Decimal System in the early 1900s, and transferred to card-catalogs in 1904), and changes in institutional structure as new departmental and divisional libraries were established and new administrative divisions—like Accessions, Cataloging, Shelving, Serial, and Reference Departments—emerged and were codified during the first decades of the century. Canfield's efforts were to maximize the accessibility of library collections, conducting reports and surveys on the state of public libraries making efforts to establish for systematic surveys of special collections across the U.S. and to campaign to make government documents more publically accessible.

Important subjects filed under sub-files are interspersed within the general alphabetical correspondence and are noted parenthetically.

Subseries II.3. Library Director's Files, 1950-1984Scope and Contents

The majority of this subseries is made up of the records of the former directors of the Libraries, Warren J. Haas and Patricia Battin. Warren J. Haas served as Associate Director of the Libraries, from 1961 to 1966. He left Columbia briefly to serve as the director of libraries at the University of Pennsylvania and was appointed Libraries Director at Columbia in 1969. In 1972 Haas became the first Vice President for Information Services and University Librarian. In 1978, Patricia Battin replaced Haas, who became the president of the Council on Libraries Resources.

Scope and Contents

This subseries begins with the records of the "Butler Librarian" before Warren J. Haas's appointment (For the records of the Director's Office before Haas (from 1943 to 1968), please see also Subseries II.1, boxes 17 to 21.) This subseries includes Haas' Day Files from 1960 to 1966 and again from 1969 to 1978; and there are multiple sequences of Haas' records from his office files, records those related to his outside committee work, and those related to his leadership of the Computing Center. Finally, there are four sequences of Patricia Battin's records, with each group representing a different addition.
