The Non-Sectarian Anti-Nazi League to Champion Human Rights (NSANL) was founded in New York City in 1933. Its goal was the coordination of a systematic trade boycott of all German-made goods in an effort to weaken the economy of Nazi Germany. Under its original name, the American League for the Defense of Jewish Rights (ALDJR), the organization selected the well-known and respected corporate lawyer Samuel Untermyer as its first president.

Biographical / Historical

During the 1930s, Untermeyer contacted community leaders throughout the United States and worldwide, urging them to participate in the boycott and to create local chapters of the organization. The NSANL held several large meetings, including the Conference of Jewish Leaders, which invited rabbis from across the US, to coordinate boycott efforts and organize a campaign to raise funds. While many supported the boycott, some feared that it would only lead to more blame and further persecution of German Jews. Others believed that the problem should be handled by an older, well-established organization, rather than by a new one. Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver suggested that that the boycott would only succeed with the support of people from all faiths, and the name was changed to the Non-Sectarian Anti-Nazi League to Champion Human Rights to reflect this idea.

The boycott operated by first identifying companies that sold German-made goods using a system of questionnaires, interviews, and correspondence with concerned customers. The NSANL then sent letters to these businesses asking them to participate in the boycott and suggesting alternative sources for the goods they needed. If a business did not comply, the NSANL urged others to boycott it. Lists of companies that sold German goods were published in the NSANL's journal, The Economic Bulletin. The NSANL also answered inquiries about specific companies and broadcasted information about the boycott over the radio.

Biographical / Historical

Untermeyer was president of the NSANL until his retirement in 1938. Led by its new president, former Boston University professor James Sheldon, the NSANL turned its attention away from the boycott as public opinion turned against Germany, and focused instead on anti-Semitic and hate groups within the United States. NSANL had several investigative branches that sent agents to collect information on these groups. The agents posed as sympathizers, sometimes even joining the groups or befriending members. Agents infiltrated the KKK, the Columbians, the National Renaissance Party, and many others. They reported their findings in detailed reports to the NSANL office, which exposed members in press releases and called for further investigation from the government. The NSANL also investigated discrimination cases, asking the New York Commissioner of Education and members of the Board of Education to conduct an investigation into the administration of City College after learning that several professors had past involvement with fascist and anti-Semitic groups and that Jewish students were not receiving credit for their work. In 1945, NSANL attempted to have Columbia University's tax exemption status revoked on the grounds of discrimination, citing falling numbers of Jewish students over the university's history.

Biographical / Historical

The NSANL also collected thousands of extremist newsletters, bulletins, newspapers, and pamphlets from organizations and individuals as evidence of their viewpoints and activity.

The NSANL was less active in the 1970s, though it continued to collect and preserve publications until the death of James Sheldon in 1975.

Subseries I.2: General Correspondence, 1917-1974

Scope and Contents

This subseries, the largest of the correspondence series, contains letters from before the founding of the NSANL through its final years in the 1970s. It contains both internal correspondence and communication with other organizations and members of the public. The letters discuss a wide range of subjects and reflect the changing focus of NSANL over time; early letters deal primarily with boycott strategies, while later correspondence concerns many aspects of human and civil rights. Files have been arranged alphabetically by individual or organization name.

Subseries I.3:Geographical Correspondence, 1931-1949

Scope and Contents

Letters in this series come from the early years of NSANL, and most relate to its efforts to boycott Nazi Germany. It includes letters sent to community leaders, especially rabbis, urging them to create local branches in their cities and to participate in the larger boycott. The letters discuss possible structure and strategy for managing the boycott and address the concerns that the boycott would lead to backlash against Jewish communities. There are also invitations to and information about the Conference of Jewish Leaders, requests for boycott materials from interested individuals, and correspondence with other anti-Nazi groups. The series carefully preserves entire conversations, with both incoming mail and copies of outgoing mail present and in order. Files are arranged by state and further subdivided by city. There is a smaller amount of international correspondence at the end of the series, arranged by country.

Subseries I.4: Other Correspondence, 1924-1975*Scope and Contents

This subseries holds a smaller amount of correspondence that has been arranged alphabetically by subject. It is unclear why it is separate from the other correspondence. Many files relate to events, such as the Boycott Conference held in 1933 to discuss the first plans for the boycott, the 1939 NSANL Annual Convention, and a variety of meetings, dinners, luncheons, and receptions. Others deal with administrative issues, publications, and several committees, among other topics.

Series II: Investigative Files, 1928-1974

Scope and Contents

These files document the NSANL's investigations of extremist groups and individuals. Most contain reports from agents who infiltrated these groups or interviewed members, sometimes joining the groups or by posing as members of other hate groups. The reports are often detailed, describing individuals, meetings, and conversations. Some files also include correspondence with group members, publications, meeting information, and photographs. The Investigative Files have been divided into five subseries:

Subseries II.1: General, 1928-1974

Scope and Contents

This subseries consists primarily of reports on companies and individuals written by investigators from the Bureau of Propaganda Investigation and the Department of Investigation, occasionally accompanied by clippings, correspondence, publications, or other evidence. They are filed alphabetically by organization or individual.

Subseries II.3: Ku Klux Klan, 1939-1956

Scope and Contents

This subseries contains several boxes on the NSANL's investigation of the KKK. Reports from agents include information on the KKK's hierarchy (appointment of new leaders, for example), membership lists, photographs, and copies of KKK documents. It also includes James Sheldon's analysis of illegal activity in the KKK which could be used by the state to shut the organization down and cancel its charter and preparations for statements in court.

Series III: Boycott Files, 1933-1947

Scope and Contents

These files document the NSANL's efforts to boycott all goods and services coming from Nazi Germany. Boxes 409 and 410 contain index cards created by NSANL to cross-reference the files and are a valuable resource for navigating the series. A card was made for each company or individual the NSANL investigated. Each card lists what categories the company's information can be found under as well as the dates of all related letters. Information on the boycott can also be found in many other series, especially in Series I: Correspondence.

Scope and Contents

The Boycott Files have been arranged into two subseries:

Subseries III.1: Boycotted Goods and Services, 1933-1942

Scope and Contents

This subseries is comprised of an alphabetical file of product and service categories. It documents the NSANL's efforts to identify specific goods and services sold by German companies, create and share boycott lists, and find suitable alternatives. Many of the files contain letters from concerned individuals asking for copies of the lists or for help in replacing German supplies with American-made items. Many also asked the NSANL to verify that specific products were not made in Germany or that particular companies did not have German ties. The NSANL's responses are included, and in some case the research material is present as well. To search for companies or individuals by name within the broader categories, refer to the index card file in boxes 409-410.

Series V: Administrative Files, 1928-1975

Scope and Contents

This series documents the NSANL's administration throughout the lifespan of the organization. It includes a large variety of reports; financial information; meeting minutes; internal memos; agendas for committees and events; lists and notes; drafts of articles and memos; proposals for campaigns; questionnaires collecting information on the boycott, membership, Jewish organizations, and local branches of Workman's Circle; open letters; subscription requests for NSANL publications; ballot information for the selection of board members; pledge cards promising donations or support for the boycott; contact information; scripts and speeches for radio broadcasts; and general information that did not fit into a category. Files are arranged first by document type and then alphabetically.

Series IX: Photographs, 1931-1959

Scope and Contents

This series includes several sets of photographs. The evidentiary photographs provide evidence of the existence and actions of extremist groups and include images of members of the National Renaissance Party at a farmhouse in Beacon, New York, KKK rallies in Georgia, defaced buildings, and a letter and photo from a housing discrimination case, among others. There are also photos from Nazi Germany, such as images of German leaders, including Hitler, bombed buildings, and one photo from the concentration camp at Dachau.

Scope and Contents

The series also includes photographs and a mockup for the book Heroes of the American Navy; photos of prominent members of NSANL including James Sheldon and George Wallace; photos of NSANL events, and publicity photos for the organization.

Series X: Publications, 1924-1978

Scope and Contents

This series holds a collection of over 500 newspapers, newsletters, and bulletins and over 4,000 pamphlets collected by the NSANL, most from extremist groups or individuals. There are also some publications from civil rights groups, religious organizations, and government organizations.

Subseries X.1: General, 1924-1978

Scope and Contents

This series holds the bulk NSANL's publications collection. Local, national, international, and foreign newspapers make up a large portion of the series, and newsletters are the second most numerous. Many of these publications are not linked to a larger group or movement, but represent the views of individuals and small groups that were able to print and distribute their newsletters nationally. Also included are diplomatic publications from foreign embassies in located in the United States, especially Russia and Chinese Taipei (Taiwan). With regard to post-war extremism, the NSANL collected publications from Charles Coughlin (Union Party), Gerald L.K. Smith (America First Party), the Black Panthers, Defenders of the Christian Faith (Gerald and Gordon Winrod), British Union (Oswald Mosley and other British fascists) along with many others.

Subseries X.3: Black Protest Periodicals, 1949-1971*Scope and Contents

Most of the newspapers and newsletters in this series were published by organizations such as the Black Workers Council, the Student Organization for Black Unity, and the Student National Coordinating Committee. They discuss hate crimes, segregation, the experiences of black soldiers serving in the Vietnam War, and marches, boycotts, legal action, and other protests. Although they focus mainly on the United States there are articles on struggles in other countries, especially South Africa. The series also contains a few publications published by white racist groups that promoted segregation, such as Southern Digest. Periodicals are arranged alphabetically.
