Historical Note

---

Historically, the duties of the Provost have been handled by the Provost, the President, and the Vice President for Academic Affairs. Since 1912, the Provost has served as the chief academic officer of the University. The Office of the Provost is responsible for the overall quality of the University's academic programs and faculty, and is a member of all Faculties and administrative boards. In this capacity, the Provost directs the development and implementation of academic plans and policies, and supervises the work of the Faculties, departments, institutes, and research centers. The Provost decides academic appointments, leaves, salaries, recommendations for tenure, and faculty grievances. The Provost is also involved in the creation of the University's annual budget and long-range financial plans, as well as support services for academic activities.

Historical Note

---

The Office was originally established by the Trustees of the University in 1811 with the simultaneous appointments of Reverend William T. Harris as President and John Mitchell Mason as Provost. The structure was created largely as a political compromise, but did not last: the office was abolished upon Mason's departure in 1816. The office was re-established in 1912 with the appointment of William H. Carpenter, who had previously held several administrative posts under President Nicholas Murray Butler. The University announced that the Provost "would be associated with the President and the Secretary of the university in the consideration and oversight of matters of general university concern and in the preparation of general university business for consideration either by the Trustees, the University Council, or the appropriate Faculty." Upon Carpenter's retirement in 1926, the position was again left vacant. The appointment of Frank D. Fackenthal, then Secretary of the University, re-established the office in 1937, by which time was seen as a second only to that of the President. These appointments were largely consistent with President Butler's management style: a top-down structure of administrators that were well-known and personally loyal to him. Fackenthal served as Provost until his appointment as Acting President upon the retirement of President Butler in 1945, and he retired once President Eisenhower was appointed in 1948. Albert C. Jacobs briefly served as Provost from 1947-1949, but once the new presidency was established under Eisenhower, he resigned and left the University.

Historical Note

---

The University went through a major administrative reorganization shortly thereafter. In 1949, the University created a new structure of four vice presidents: Vice Presidents of the University (also commonly known as Vice President for Academic Administration or Academic Affairs), Business and Finance, Development, and Medical Affairs. This structure would serve to provide the president with support in key administrative areas. However, the first Vice President of the University, George B. Pegram, was forced to retire in 1950 due to the University's implementation of a new mandatory retirement age for administrators. At this point, the position's duties were given to Grayson Kirk, who had been appointed Provost in 1949. The two positions remained closely related until the permanent abolishment of the position of vice president in 1990.

Historical Note

---

Grayson Kirk served as Vice President and Provost until 1953, when he was made President of the University. In addition, Kirk served as Acting President from the end of 1950, when Eisenhower was granted leave to serve as commander of NATO. From 1950-1953, Kirk handled two issues of lasting importance. First, Kirk managed Columbia's response to the questions surrounding communism in academia that were raised during the McCarthy era. Second, he proposed to limit the service of lecturers on the faculty to five years. This change, adopted by the Trustees in 1952, ultimately set in motion the adoption of "up or out" rules for faculty appointments shortly thereafter.

Historical Note

---

John A. Krout succeeded Kirk as Vice President and Provost in 1953. The New York Times described his role as "second in command to the President, chief of the university's educational system and a member of all faculty and administrative boards." He had started at Columbia in 1926, and had previously served as Associate Provost and Dean of the Graduate Faculties. In 1958, Jacques Barzun was appointed as Dean of Faculties and Provost so that Krout could focus on the duties of the vice-presidency. Upon Barzun's appointment, the New York Times noted that he would "be responsible for educational administration and liaison in administrative affairs among the university's schools." This structure remained intact when Krout retired in 1962; a new vice-president, Lawrence Chamberlain, was immediately appointed to succeed him. During his tenure, Chamberlain had direct responsibility for the capital gifts campaign, community relations, and student health. He was closely involved with Morningside Heights, Inc., and was instrumental in developing plans to deal with tenants evicted from Columbia-owned buildings and the larger issue of neighborhood conflict resolution. The University's physical expansion and its proposal to build a new gym in Morningside Park continued to strain its relationship with the surrounding neighborhood throughout the 1960s.

Historical Note

---

The 1960s presented tremendous challenges for the University. While the University had many positive achievements, it also had larger problems. After Butler's administration, the administrative structure was decentralized in a move away from his management style. In addition, the University began to experience financial difficulties by the mid-1960s. To combat this problem, the University launched a major capital campaign in 1965. But by 1967, a major administrative change proved necessary. While President Kirk remained in office, several administrators, including Barzun and Chamberlain, resigned in June 1967. David B. Truman was appointed to be Vice President and Provost. Truman, the Dean of Columbia College, was popular with students, faculty, and alumni. It was thought combining the duties of the two positions would create stronger leadership and help the administration to deal with new operational and fundraising challenges. But the events of 1968 forced additional changes. By early 1969, both Kirk and Truman had resigned and left the University. The administration remained in flux until the installation of President McGill in 1970. Vice President and Provost William Theodore de Bary was appointed in 1971. McGill attempted to calm student protests and neighborhood tensions early in his presidency, and much of the rest of his tenure was spent attempting to deal with the University's financial issues. His administration, and that of de Bary's, were marked by conflict with deans and other administrators in efforts to work through these problems. De Bary resigned in 1978, and McGill left the presidency in 1980.

Historical Note

---

After the installation of President Michael Sovern in 1980, the University restructured the Office of the Provost. The University created a "tripartite provostship" in which there were three provosts; one each for Health Sciences, Arts & Sciences, and the Morningside Professional Schools. This structure did not work, and the University returned to a single provost, Robert F. Goldberger, in 1982. The 1980s saw a shift in academic priorities. Professional schools rose in importance, as arts and sciences dealt with lower staffing, enrollments, and budgets. Goldberger was instrumental in the University's efforts to use its biomedical research in the corporate world, and helped to establish the science and technology development office and a research center at Audubon Park. This shift caused tension within the University, and contributed to Sovern's departure in the early 1990s.

Historical Note

---

Provost Jonathan Cole was appointed Vice President of Arts and Sciences in 1987. He became Provost in 1989 after the departure of Goldberger, and remained provost under President George Rupp; his tenure was the second longest of all provosts. Cole was instrumental in developing a long-range plan for the University in 1991, and he was responsible for upgrading academic facilities and support services, departments, health sciences, and the quality of faculty, teaching, research, and students during his tenure as provost. He also started new programs and initiatives to improve research and teaching, including collaborative projects. This was not without controversy: efforts to recruit world-class faculty tightened tenure standards, which frustrated some departments, and led to the creation of a private elementary school, which upset advocates for the local public school system. A collaborative project to create an educational website, Fathom.com, was also criticized and the site ultimately went out of business in 2003. But on the whole, Cole is widely recognized and praised as having been instrumental in the positive academic transformation that took place at Columbia University during the 1990s.

Historical Note

---

President Lee Bollinger appointed Alan Brinkley as Provost in 2003. Bollinger also redefined the position; he took on direct management of Health Sciences, and also planned to take a more direct role in Academic Affairs. Brinkley came from the History Department, which he had joined in 1991, and had chaired since 2000. As provost, Brinkley focused on academic initiatives that included the increasing the size of the faculty, launching a new science building, reviewing undergraduate education, and increasing the globalization of the University. He also created a Vice Provost for Diversity Initiatives, and was involved in the development of the Office of Work/Life. Brinkley returned to teaching and research in 2009. His successor, Claude M. Steele, came to the University from Stanford, where he had chaired the psychology department (1997-2000), and directed the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences (2002-2009). He began his tenure as Provost in September 2009.

Summary

The records document the activities of the Offices of the Provost and the Vice President for Academic Affairs and begin with the Jacques Barzun administration, circa 1956. Any extent records that predate the Barzun administration are most likely part of the Central Files (1890s-1971), which are the records of the Office of the President. In addition, it appears that there is a small amount of material in the personal papers of both Jacques Barzun and Grayson Kirk, which are held by Columbia University's Rare Book & Manuscript Library.

^ Return to Table of Contents

Summary

---

The records are particularly strong in the documentation of the Vice President's and Provost's work on issues related to academics, faculty, and indirectly, student life. The records include documentation on the administration, development, and history of departments, programs, research institutes and centers, schools, and academic services. These files also touch on issues related to development, such as budgets, committees, community relations, funding, grants, office politics, personnel, real estate, space planning, special projects, and university relations with affiliated institutions.

^ Return to Table of Contents

Summary

---

The Provost is closely involved with the faculty of the University, as one of the main functions of the position is to handle appointments, grievances, leaves, salaries, and tenure for all faculty members. The records contain information not only on these responsibilities, but also on awards, fringe benefits, housing, neighborhood conditions, recruitment, research, retirement, safety, and teaching loads. The Provost also maintained correspondence and subject files for many individual faculty members.

^ Return to Table of Contents

Summary

---

While the Vice President and Provost were usually not directly responsible for student life issues, many of the records reflect on issues that affect student life, such as 1968 crisis and its aftermath, academic planning, admissions, course offerings, discipline, financial aid, housing, safety, services, space, tuition, and unionization of graduate students.

^ Return to Table of Contents

Summary

---

The majority of the files are essentially correspondence files. The files include correspondence between the Office of the Vice President and/or Provost and administrators, committee members, deans, department chairs, donors, faculty members, foundations, offices, and students. These files also contain agendas, agreements, background information, budgets, committee materials, legal documents, memoranda, minutes, proposals, questionnaires, personnel records, policy statements, reports, statistical data, and surveys.

Series I. Office Files, 1939-2006, (1956-2003)

Scope and Contents

The filing system of the Provost's Office is not organized around individual administrations, but rather around the ongoing functions of the office. There is some overlap between the different subseries due to variation between the filing systems among administrations. The Office Files document the main activities and duties of the Provost, including the office's involvement in the work of academic and budget planning and policymaking, and the work of centers, departments, faculty, institutes, programs, and research centers.

Scope and Contents

Additional records are also filed with the Files of Individuals in Series II.

Subseries I.1: Budget and Planning Information

Scope and Contents

contains records documenting the provost's activities in the creation of the University's annual budget. The records include correspondence, data, descriptive information, figures, memoranda, plans, papers, projections, reports, and statistics.

Subseries I.5.2. Named Professorships, 1956-1986

Scope and Contents

consists of files kept on named professorships kept by the provost's office. The documentation varies within the individual files. Some files include only the offer and acceptance letters, while others contain more information on the nominating process for the professorship. Other files also include records documenting the establishment, purpose, and finances of the fund that supports a particular named professorship.

Scope and Contents

There is additional information on named professorships in the files on Foundations in Subseries I.6 and within any records related to faculty members who held named professorships. The Columbia University Office of the Secretary also kept a set of Named Professorship files, and these sometimes contain records not found in the Provost's files.

Subseries I.7. Institutes and Centers, 1956-2006*Scope and Contents

includes material on issues such as administration, budgets, funding, programs, and staffing for both established and proposed centers and institutes at Columbia University. While the files primarily document established centers and institutes at Columbia University, there are also some files which document the University's relationships with non-affiliated centers and institutes. The records include committee materials, correspondence, planning statements, proposals, reviews, reports, and surveys.

Scope and Contents

Additional records for centers and institutes associated with specific schools are also filed with records related to Schools in Subseries I.10.

Series II. Files of Individual Staff Members, 1957-1998

Scope and Contents

This series consists of the records of individual Vice Presidents and Assistant, Associate, and Deputy Provosts that were filed in distinct sets outside of the Office Files; they were likely maintained by the individuals themselves. These records reflect the responsibilities and work of the individuals, rather than the office as a whole, and include agreements, committee materials, correspondence, interviews, memoranda, minutes, proposals, reports, and transcripts.

Subseries II.1. Elinor Barber, 1989-1994

Scope and Contents

Barber served as Assistant Provost for Special Projects under Provost Jonathan Cole. The majority of her records consist of committee and research projects on admissions, civility, free speech on campus, research universities, and tenure.

Subseries II.1.1. Committees, 1990-1994
Scope and Contents consists primarily of records related to the Committee on Academic Quality (CAQ) and the Committee for the Promotion of Mutual Understanding and Civility. The former was concerned with reviewing the tenure system, while the latter dealt with several issues including civil speech on campus, community, and diversity. The subseries also includes records on committees related to benefits and campus life. The records include correspondence, interviews, minutes, memoranda, surveys, and material on related campus lectures.

Subseries II.2: Lawrence Chamberlain, 1957-1967

Scope and Contents

Chamberlain served as Vice President of the University from 1962-1967. At this time, the Vice President had direct responsibility for the capital gifts campaign, community relations, and student health. After Chamberlain retired, the positions of Vice President and Provost were combined under David B. Truman.

Subseries II.2.3. Community Planning and Relations,
1949, 1957-1967, 1949, 1957-1967

Scope and Contents

contains material on community relations and planning that is not specifically related to University committees. Most of the planning material is related to the University's proposed expansion in the Morningside Heights neighborhood, but there is also some material on the Manhattanville, or Piers, area. Many of the records are related to either specific buildings or Morningside Heights, Inc. (MHInc., which later became the Morningside Area Alliance). MHInc. was founded in 1947 to provide collective urban and community planning for Morningside Heights and Manhattanville; its members are drawn from the area's major institutions. The Vice President's office was responsible for MHInc., and Chamberlain served on its board of directors. These files include board of directors' material, correspondence, reports, and records for the community program and executive committees.

Scope and Contents

Files on specific buildings contain general information about several Columbia University buildings--clippings, street patrol reports, and documentation of the date of purchase, use, and occupancy of the buildings.

Subseries II.5.5. Project Aurora, 1984-1988

Scope and Contents

contains records related to Project Aurora, a 6.5 million dollar grant from IBM that was administered by University Center for Computing Activities (CUCCA) to initiate a "campus-wide move in information and instruction toward the electronic university." IBM funded the purchase of a mainframe to support the libraries' information system, as well as approximately 30 research projects in schools and departments. The records include the project agreement, proposal, and the individual files on proposed research projects that were submitted for review by the Project Aurora Proposal Selection Committee.

Subseries II.7. Stephen A. Rittenberg, 1969-1993

Scope and Contents

Rittenberg served as an Associate Provost from 1982-1994, when he was made the Vice Provost for Academic Administration. During his tenure as an associate provost, Rittenberg was responsible for developing and administering University policy and procedures governing the appointments of officers of instruction, research and the libraries; administering reviews of the faculties and other academic units and approving changes in curriculum. He also served as a liaison to the University Senate on academic personnel and programs, supervised interschool endowments and gifts, assisted the Provost with academic and financial planning, and worked with the New York State Education Department and the Middle States Association of Colleges and Universities on behalf of the University.

Subseries II.7.3. Student Protests, 1992-1993

Scope and Contents

consists primarily of records relating to the protest against University's development plans for Audubon Ballroom, where Malcolm X was assassinated in 1965, at Hamilton Hall in December 1992. These records include articles, clippings, correspondence, hearing transcripts, meeting summaries, video frame enlargements, videotapes, and files on individual students.

Scope and Contents

Rittenberg's records also include a small amount of material related to a protest against a closed administrative meeting on financial aid, which also tied into the future of needs blind admissions, in February 1992. There records include articles and correspondence.

Scope and Contents

With the exception of the published articles and clippings, all of these materials in this subseries are restricted for 75 years.

Series IV: Archived Website, 2010-present

Scope and Contents

This series contains the archived websites of the Office of the Provost as well as those of the offices reporting to the Provost. The Columbia University Libraries have been capturing Columbia domain websites via the Archive-It service since June 2010. In 2015 Columbia transitioned from a once-a-year crawl of the entire web domain in December to a semi-annual crawl in June and December. All columbia.edu archived websites can be accessed online through the University Archives Archive-It site. For websites prior to 2010, please visit the Internet Archive's Wayback Machine.
