

ArchivesSpace

a community served by †Lyrasis

Jason Rogers papers 6340481

This finding aid was produced using ArchivesSpace on January 13, 2025.
Description is written in: English.

Rare Book and Manuscript Library

Butler Library, 6th Floor
Columbia University, Mail Code 1127
535 W. 114th St.
New York, NY 10027
Business Number: (212) 854-5153
Fax Number: (212) 854-1365
rbml@libraries.cul.columbia.edu
URL: <http://www.columbia.edu/cu/lweb/indiv/rbml/index.html>

Table of Contents

Summary Information	3
Biographical Note	3
Summary	9
Administrative Information	11
Related Materials	12
Controlled Access Headings	12
Collection Inventory	13
Series I: Correspondence	13
Series II: Writings	13
Subseries II.1: Published Writings	13
Subseries II.2: Unpublished Writings	14
Subseries II.3: General Writings	14
Series III: Advertising Campaigns	15
Series IV: The Globe	16
Series V: Newspaper Business	16
Subseries V.1: Newspaper Associations	17
Subseries V.2: Newspaper Research	17
Series VI: Personal	18
Subseries VI.1: Jason Rogers	18
Subseries VI.2: Walter Rogers	18

Summary Information

Repository:	Rare Book and Manuscript Library
Creator:	Rogers, Jason, 1868-1932
Title:	Jason Rogers papers
ID:	6340481
ID:	MS#1424
Date [inclusive]:	1825-1971
Physical Description:	6 linear feet 12 archival document boxes, 1 slide box, 1 small box
Language of the Material:	English .
Abstract:	This collection contains records related to the career of Jason Rogers, a journalist and publicist who contributed to the field of newspaper advertising. It features correspondence between Rogers and many important figures in the industry during the early twentieth century, and will be useful for researchers interested in journalism and advertising from this period.

Preferred Citation

Identification of specific item; Date (if known); Jason Rogers papers; Box and Folder; Rare Book and Manuscript Library, Columbia University Library.

^ Return to Table of Contents

Biographical Note

An innovative journalist from print's heyday, Jason Rogers made his greatest contributions to the field of newspaper advertising. He was best known as the publisher of the Globe, a minor but venerable daily in New York City. For more than a decade, starting in 1910, he made the publication a success; maintaining its "clean and purposeful" reputation, while also multiplying circulation more than tenfold. By 1923, even competitors recognized the Globe as "the finest afternoon paper in existence." Nevertheless, that year he could do nothing to prevent a hostile buyout by a media rival. The new owner fired the staff and discontinued the paper. Neither Rogers, nor his career, ever fully recovered from this calamity.

^ Return to Table of Contents

Biographical Note

An advocate for probity and transparency, Rogers dedicated himself to sloughing off the advertising profession's snake-oil taint. He promised his clients "steady returns" rather than miraculous windfalls. "The day is gone by," he wrote, "when it is safe to count on a sucker being born every minute." But, it was a hustling age in newspapers, and Rogers himself never fully shed his striver's skin. He called his method "printed salesmanship," and it is difficult, at times, to differentiate his efforts from the sort of Barnum-esque stunts that he despised. From his desk at the Globe, Rogers inundated the industry with enthusiastic campaigns. Month on month, year on year, colleagues received his circulars, broadsides, novel ideas, stunning assertions, and confident projections. "Please Read This Carefully," a typical letter began, "I Think it Means Dollars in Your Pocket." Another offered to "Open the Door to Opportunity." A third predicted "the Biggest and Most Profitable Advertising Season on Record."

^ Return to Table of Contents

Biographical Note

Born on August 5, 1868, in Morrisania--now part of the Bronx--Rogers had printer's ink in his veins. His grandfather, William Cauldwell, owned and edited a local weekly called the Sunday Mercury. He encouraged young Jason to produce his own broadsheet, and the child took to the work, setting type and cranking a printing press by hand. After that experience, Rogers recalled, "I looked forward to the day when I should be able to work on a real newspaper." He did not wait patiently, but pestered his family for the freedom to launch his career. His parents held out until he was twelve. Then, though he had not yet completed grammar school, they permitted him to take a position in his grandfather's plant, at a salary of two dollars a week.

^ Return to Table of Contents

Biographical Note

"Once started at the newspaper office," he wrote, "during a period of fifteen years I worked in practically every department of the shop, enjoying every phase of activity, just because I was so keenly filled with a desire to master every detail and eventually rise to the top." The Mercury office was on Park Row in lower Manhattan. Also known as Newspaper Row, this street was the center of the publishing universe, housing such legendary enterprises as the Times, the World, and the Tribune. When awake, Rogers learned his business; at night he sometimes slept between stored newsprint rolls. On weekends, he returned to his parents' house in Morrisania. In 1893, his grandfather promoted him to publisher of the Mercury. When the paper failed two years later, Rogers circulated from the Providence News, to the Chicago Inter-Ocean, the Chicago Journal, and then the New York Sun. During this apprenticeship he learned the trade from header to footer. "I had been through the business office from office boy to assistant cashier and bookkeeper," he recalled. "I had been through all the mechanical departments, had traveled over all outlying newspaper territory on circulation work, and had considerable experience in selling advertising."

^ Return to Table of Contents

Biographical Note

In 1904, he signed on as a manager at the Commercial Advertiser, an irrelevant evening paper in New York. Founded by Noah Webster in 1793, it was the oldest daily in the city. By the twentieth century, the journal had little but longevity to boast of. Quaint and old-fashioned, it could not even think to compete with the mammoths of the industry. At a time when the World claimed a circulation of 600,000 and the Journal boasted an astounding 950,000, the Commercial Advertiser's hovered around 12,000. This changed on February 1, 1904. That morning, tens of thousands of New Yorkers received miniature globes in the mail. Rogers had transformed his old journal into the new Globe. He also halved the price, to one penny. The first issue sold 100,000 copies.

^ Return to Table of Contents

Biographical Note

"My boy," a mentor once confided to Rogers, "don't let the other fellow make your newspaper. Make your own newspaper, and as long as it is marching forward don't waste any time watching what the other fellows are doing." In May 1910, Rogers was promoted to publisher, and the Globe became his newspaper. Finally, he had the "opportunity of trying out and applying plans and ideas picked up in thirty years' work." His position made him a public figure, and he did not hesitate to weigh-in on questions of national importance. A member of the ocean-liner set, he traveled the world, writing home on stationery from whichever grand hotel at which he happened to be staying. Yet, he never lost interest in the most picayune questions of picas and points. On the same day, he might wire the President with a foreign-policy suggestion, and also rebuke a typesetter for wasting a line of print on the back page of the night edition.

^ Return to Table of Contents

Biographical Note

Concerning himself with every detail of the Globe's production, he demanded high-minded and independent reporting. "A real newspaper maker," he believed, was "a man who recognizes that in his daily task he must be both a student and a teacher." His paper ran guides to purchasing pure food, offered home study courses, and printed bedtime stories for children. Rogers was a despot when it came to typography. A sloppy header was shabby as "a soiled white tie on a man." A worn-out piece of type was "like a weather-beaten silk hat." He wanted his publication to be neither garish nor fussy, but suited both to "a Bowery bar where the pugs study the sport stuff" and "the boudoir of the refined lady interested in the musical or dramatic departments." When the printers finally applied his suggestions, he exulted: the Globe is beginning to look like a real newspaper!"

^ Return to Table of Contents

Biographical Note

Perhaps Rogers's most important contribution to professionalizing the advertising business was his drafting of the plan for the Audit Bureau of Circulations, an organization that still exists. Since the nineteenth century, newspapers had set advertising rates based on circulation figures, but had rarely kept accurate--or honest--records. The Sun boasted on its masthead of "over 1,000,000" a week, but did not specify if this number referred to copies printed or those that actually sold. Where the New York Times displays its motto, "All the News That's Fit to Print," Joseph Pulitzer's World promised "Books Open to All." Yet there was no standard method of accounting, and advertisers knew they were being overcharged. In Rogers's first year at the Globe, he kept exact records based on copies sold. Against the advice of colleagues, he published the results, and challenged competitors to do the same. In 1913, he promoted a scheme for a national organization to objectively measure newspaper circulation. Such a group would take the guesswork out of setting advertising rates. A year later, the Audit Bureau of Circulations was founded on Rogers's principles. Today, circulation auditing is a universal practice.

^ Return to Table of Contents

Biographical Note

By 1923, the Globe's readership was well above 200,000 per day. The paper was renowned for its innovative features and serious reporting; it could "be counted on to take a courageous stand on all public questions." What's more, it was profitable. In May, however, news started spreading that the Globe's ownership wanted to sell. Several buyers showed interest. One was Frank Munsey, who owned the evening Sun. He wanted to buy out the Globe in order to eliminate a competitor. A notorious media tycoon, Munsey's critics said he lacked "the slightest recognition that there are such things as journalistic ideals, or public service, or the nobility of a great profession;" he was a "dealer in dailies--little else and little more." In New York alone, he had already purchased the Daily News, the Sun, the Press, the Herald, the Telegram, and the Daily Continent. These, as well as many other papers and magazines, had passed through his control. Once in his grasp, a newspaper faced merger, decline, or demise. If a property disappointed him, he gave a simple order: "Kill it."

^ Return to Table of Contents

Biographical Note

Rogers had no financial interest in his newspaper, and thus no say in its fate. "My plans are rather jumbled right now," he wrote to his son. "If anyone unsatisfactory to me buys the paper I will gracefully drop out." In late May, Munsey, the most unsatisfactory buyer possible, purchased the Globe for $2.3 million. He incorporated its most popular features and franchises into the Sun, and dismissed almost the entire staff with two weeks' pay. On the evening of June 2, solemn workers at the doomed paper gathered in the basement of the printing plant to watch the last edition blur through the presses. Everyone signed the final copy and presented it to Rogers as a gift. The next evening, the city paused for a moment of mourning. "Today in New York a considerable number of newspaper readers find themselves without a usual companion," a sentimental writer noted. "An axe has once more been swung. Where once was a tree is now not even a stump."

^ Return to Table of Contents

Biographical Note

The sale, Rogers later wrote, "was a tragedy to me and my co-workers." None could have suffered more than he, who had dedicated himself to the paper's improvement over the previous twenty years. Rogers worried for his staff, but tried to seem confident about his own future; "it will be a matter of weeks or months to catch hold again," he wrote his son. "I have no fears but one can never tell." Instead of taking a job at a different publication, he tried to replace what he had lost. He had launched many campaigns in his career, but now he organized his greatest yet. On the morning of June 10, 1924--almost a year to the day after his paper's demise--Rogers placed an ad in the New York Times. "Do You Want a Clean and Purposeful Newspaper Like the Old Globe?" it asked. He was inserting the notice to ascertain "the extent of the interest in a clean and uncontrolled new evening newspaper" like the one that had been destroyed. "If you want such a newspaper, please write to me," Rogers concluded. As a final enticement, he offered to let the readers themselves vote on the name for the new publication.

^ Return to Table of Contents

Biographical Note

At first, the venture looked promising. Letters and cards tided in. Rogers drafted a business plan and filed papers of incorporation. A week after his first ad, he ran a second notice, to the "several thousand" responders. "On behalf of my co-workers," he wrote, "I thank you sincerely for your interest in our effort to restore journalism to freedom from purely commercial domination." Soon after this, he announced that 12,000 people had replied to his challenge. The new paper was supposed to begin publication in the fall or winter. But eager responses apparently did not add up to interested investors. Rogers's vision of a "newspaper organized and operated by newspapermen of sound experience and unselfish purpose for the benefit of the people" was not to be.

^ Return to Table of Contents

Biographical Note

He was 56 years old at the time of this second disappointment, and would never again hold a position commensurate with the one he had lost at the Globe. From 1924 to 1926, he edited and published Advertisers' Weekly, an industry newsletter. Then he worked as general manager of the Kansas City Journal-Post, leaving this job after two years. Always a prolific writer, Rogers had authored several books on newspapers and advertising. His manuals, filled with peppy exhortations, were widely used in the nation's journalism schools. In his later life, though, he found it increasingly difficult to find publishers for his work.

^ Return to Table of Contents

Biographical Note

Rogers had married Marian Shillaber in 1894. Their son, Walter, was born during 1901 in New Rochelle, New York. As a child, Rogers had vacationed on Cape Cod. During his time at the Globe, he had summered there with his family. In 1929, he moved to North Falmouth, Massachusetts. Even in retirement, he continued his advertising drives; perhaps his last, the New England campaign, was inspired by his new home. According to the Falmouth Enterprise, he was "a familiar figure on Main Street where he liked to drop in and chat with the merchants on their local problems." During his final illness, he still assembled figures and crafted plans for municipal improvements. Jason Rogers died on April 26, 1932. He was 63 years old.

^ Return to Table of Contents

Summary

Jason Rogers devoted his career to promoting journalism and professionalizing newspaper advertising. This collection contains drafts and documents related specifically to his work, as well as his research on the wider industry. It includes correspondence between Rogers and scores of editors and publishers, advertisers, educators, and politicians from cities and towns around the nation. Most of these letters were generated by Rogers himself, who ceaselessly--relentlessly, his colleagues must have thought--shared his latest ideas with the rest of the profession. From Adolph Ochs at the "Times" to the business manager at the "Spokane Spokesman-Review", no one was safe from Rogers's broadside campaigns.

^ Return to Table of Contents

Summary

The collection also features documents from 1910-1923, when Rogers was the publisher of the "Globe" in New York City. There are editions of the newspaper, internal memoranda related to his formatting suggestions, as well as clippings concerning the publication's eventual demise. Rogers launched most of his largest campaigns during these years, since it was his position at the "Globe" that gave his ideas weight.

^ Return to Table of Contents

Summary

Rogers was the author of several books on newspaper publishing. They were all focused on the same general topic--the proper way to run a profitable publication--and so it is not surprising that their titles have a certain uniformity: "Newspaper Building""Newspaper Making""Fundamentals of Newspaper Making""Building Newspaper Advertising", etc. The collection includes many typescript and manuscript drafts of these, and other, works. It also features shorter advertising materials written by Rogers, and some correspondence with prospective publishers.

^ Return to Table of Contents

Summary

Rogers involved himself with many of the pressing publishing issues of his era. This collection contains materials on some of these, including newsprint pricing, newspaper associations, circulations auditing, and the Pressman's Strike of 1919. It also features some advertising materials that Rogers himself acquired, including several advertising maps from the 1920s.

^ Return to Table of Contents

Summary

There are some personal materials present, including family correspondence. Jason Rogers's son, Walter Shillaber Rogers, maintained his father's papers after his death. Several files contain records related to Walter Rogers's career as an engineer and naval officer.

^ Return to Table of Contents

Summary

A selected bibliography of Rogers's published works is attached to the container list.

^ Return to Table of Contents

Administrative Information

Publication Statement

Rare Book and Manuscript Library

Butler Library, 6th Floor

Columbia University, Mail Code 1127

535 W. 114th St.

New York, NY 10027

Business Number: (212) 854-5153

Fax Number: (212) 854-1365

rbml@libraries.cul.columbia.edu

URL: <http://www.columbia.edu/cu/lweb/indiv/rbml/index.html>

Revision Description

xml document instance created by Carrie Hintz EAD was imported spring 2019 as part of the ArchivesSpace Phase II migration. 2009-06-26 2019-05-20

Restrictions on Access

Boxes 1-12 of this collection are located off-site. You will need to request this material at least three business days in advance to use the collection in the Rare Book and Manuscript Library reading room. Boxes 13 and 14 contain glass slides and are shelved on-site.

Restrictions on Access

This collection has no restrictions.

Terms Governing Use and Reproduction

Reproductions may be made for research purposes. The RBML maintains ownership of the physical material only. Copyright remains with the creator and his/her heirs. The responsibility to secure copyright permission rests with the patron.

Immediate Source of Acquisition

This collection was purchased from: Source of acquisition--Charles Apfelbaum Rare Manuscripts and Archives. Method of acquisition--Purchase; Date of acquisition--1996.

Processing Information

Papers processed Thai Jones (GSAS 2013) 2007.

Processing Information

Finding Aid written by Thai Jones (GSAS 2013) October 2007.

Accruals

Materials may have been added to the collection since this finding aid was prepared.
Contact rbml@columbia.edu for more information.

^ Return to Table of Contents

Related Materials

Selectec Related Material-- at Other Repositories

Jason Rogers Papers at the Kansas City Public Library

Selectec Related Material-- at Other Repositories

This collection is related to Jason Rogers's time as business manager at the Kansas City Journal-Post.

^ Return to Table of Contents

Controlled Access Headings

- Advertising, Newspaper
- Newspaper publishing -- United States -- History
- Newspapers
- Newspapers -- Accounting
- Newspapers -- Circulation
- Newsprint industry
- Publishers and publishing -- United States -- Biography
- Journalists
- Globe and Commercial Advertiser (New York, N.Y.)
- Rogers, Jason, 1868-1932

- Audit Bureau of Circulations

Collection Inventory

Series I: Correspondence, 1892-1958

Scope and Contents

Series I contains general correspondence between Jason Rogers and his enormous circle of professional colleagues. These letters from journalists, educators, advertisers, and politicians mostly relate to Rogers's various campaigns to improve standards in newspaper marketing. One folder features correspondence from Rogers's time at the Kansas City Journal-Post. This series also includes some family letters, mainly between Jason Rogers and his son, Walter. Most of the correspondence here was filed separately in the Rogers papers. There are many more letters filed chronologically throughout the collection in folders directly related to specific subjects. For instance, each of Rogers's advertising campaigns contains its own documents, clippings, and correspondence.

Title/Description	Instances
Personal, 1892-1951	box 1	folder 1
Incoming, 1912-1917
1912-1917	box 1	folder 2
1918	box 1	folder 3
1919 January-June	box 1	folder 4
1919 July-1928	box 1	folder 5
Outgoing, 1915-1929	box 2	folder 1
Jason and Walter, 1922-1931	box 2	folder 2
Kansas City Journal-Post, 1927-1928	box 2	folder 3
Walter Rogers, 1915-1958	box 2	folder 4

^ Return to Table of Contents

Series II: Writings, 1915-1930

Scope and Contents

Series II features typescripts, manuscripts, and published works from Rogers's career as an advertising writer and book author. Rogers's drafts tend to be combinations of typewritten and handwritten pages, combined with note cards and clippings.

Subseries II.1: Published Writings, 1915-1920

Scope and Contents

These files contain typescripts and manuscripts of Rogers's books and pamphlets that were eventually published.

Title/Description	Instances
Graphic Commercial Survey, 1915-1916	box 2	folder 5
Newspaper Data Books, 1916-1920	box 2	folder 6
Newspaper Efficiency, 1917	box 3	folder 1
Newspaper Advertising, 1917	box 3	folder 2
Newspaper Making, 1919	box 3	folder 3
Fundamentals of Newspaper Building, 1919	box 3	folder 4
Little Black Book, 1920	box 3	folder 5

Subseries II.2: Unpublished Writings, 1925-1931Scope and Contents

The manuscripts and typescripts in these folders were never published.

Title/Description	Instances
The Real Story of Advertising, undated	box 3	folder 6
Notes for America's Outstanding Newspapers, 1925	box 3	folder 7
Selling Through Newspaper Advertising circa, 1925	box 3	folder 8
Selling through Newspaper Advertising
Notes, circa 1925	box 4	folder 1
Typescript, circa, 1925	box 4	folder 2 to 3
Starting A Newspaper, 1929-1930	box 4	folder 4
Plan For Buying Advertising, 1930	box 4	folder 5
Balanced Production and Controlled Distribution, 1930-1931	box 4	folder 6

Subseries II.3: General Writings, 1916-1930Scope and Contents

Rogers wrote most of these short pieces as advertising copy, or as marketing materials for his various campaigns.

Title/Description	Instances
"Again Cape Cod," undated	box 5	folder 1
Advertisers' Weekly circa, 1923-1927	box 5	folder 2
Harvard Advertising Awards, 1925

	box 5	folder 3
Business Writings, 1916-1929	box 5	folder 4
Kansas City Journal-Post Editorials, 1928	box 5	folder 5
Advertising Writing, circa, 1930	box 5	folder 6

^ Return to Table of Contents

Series III: Advertising Campaigns, 1912-1930

Scope and Contents

Rogers may be little known today, but his contemporaries were all-too aware of his activities. In the productive years of his career, he inundated his colleagues with one campaign after another. Most of his ideas came from practices at the Globe; his extensive publicizing of his own innovations no doubt added to his paper's reputation for creative marketing. He launched each of these drives with a circular letter and some advertising materials, and then reaped responses from editors around the nation. These responses were then used to generate publicity for the next campaign. Rogers's efforts ranged from supporting the League of Nations to fighting income-tax evasion.

Title/Description	Instances
Advertising the Advertiser, 1912-1913
Correspondence, 1912-1913	box 5	folder 7
Scrapbook, 1913	box 6	folder 1
Scrapbook, 1912-1913	box 6	folder 2
Scrapbook, 1913	box 6	folder 3
Associated Newspapers, 1912-1913	box 6	folder 4
Gilt Edge List, 1912-1914
Correspondence, July 1913	box 7	folder 1
Correspondence, 1913 August-1914 January	box 7	folder 2
Documents, 1913	box 7	folder 3
Home Study Course Campaign, 1914	box 7	folder 4
Anti-Stephens Bill Campaign, 1914-1919	box 7	folder 5
Pure Food Directory, 1914-1916	box 7	folder 6
Bedtime Stories Club, 1915	box 7	folder 7
Evening Newspapers, 1916	box 7	folder 8
Closer Cooperation, 1918	box 7	folder 9
Direct Route to the Greatest Market, 1919	box 8	folder 1
League of Nations, 1919	box 8	folder 2

Newspaper Valuation, 1919-1921	box 8	folder 3
Anti-Income Tax Evasion, 1921-1922	box 8	folder 4
Pittsburgh Plate Glass and Campbell Soup Company, 1925-1930	box 8	folder 5
Regional Advertising, 1929-1930	box 8	folder 6

^ Return to Table of Contents

Series IV: The Globe, 1910-1924

Scope and Contents

While much of the collection features records dating from Rogers's time as publisher of the Globe, this series deals specifically with his activities at the paper. These files feature some business documents, and contain several issues of the publication. Several folders are dedicated to the 125th anniversary edition, which was published in 1918. The saga of the Globe's demise – and Rogers's unsuccessful attempt to replace it – unfolds through clippings and correspondence in this series.

Title/Description	Instances
Business Documents, 1910-1922	box 8	folder 7
Special Advertising Edition, 1915	box 8	folder 8
Format Critique, 1916	box 8	folder 9
Individual Issues, 1917-1923	box 8	folder 10
America's Oldest Daily Newspaper , 1918	box 9	folder 1
125th Anniversary Issue, 1918
125th Anniversary Issue, 1918	box 9	folder 2
Correspondence, 1918	box 9	folder 3
Last Issue, 1923	box 9	folder 4
Clippings--Death of The Globe , 1923	box 9	folder 5
Clippings--Frank Munsey, 1924-1926	box 9	folder 6
A Newspaper Like the Old Globe , 1924	box 9	folder 7-8
Slides, undated	box 13
Physical Description: (18 slides)

^ Return to Table of Contents

Series V: Newspaper Business, 1874-1948

Scope and Contents

This series holds materials collected by Rogers related to the wider newspaper industry

Subseries V.1: Newspaper Associations, 1910-1948Scope and Contents

Some of Rogers's greatest contributions came from his advocating wider cooperation between journalists. This subseries contains files related to the origins of the Audit Bureau of Circulations. It also holds records from some publishing conferences.

Title/Description	Instances
Audit Bureau of Circulations, 1911-1927
Correspondence, 1911-1927	box 10	folder 1
Clippings, 1913-1931	box 10	folder 2
Business Documents, 1910-1948	box 10	folder 3
Typescripts, undated	box 10	folder 4
Press Associations, 1913-1929	box 10	folder 5

Subseries V.2: Newspaper Research, 1874-1932Scope and Contents

This subseries holds a small selection of historical advertisements, as well as clippings on journalism history. Subjects in these folders include Henry Ford and Victor Lawson, founder of the Chicago Daily News. There is some information on the Pressman's Strike of 1919, and on the larger question of the price of newsprint.

Title/Description	Instances
Advertisements, 1874-1929	box 10	folder 6
Chicago Daily News , 1888-1932
Appraisal of Chicago Daily News , 1888-1932	box 10	folder 7
Clippings--Victor Lawson, 1925	box 10	folder 8
Slides, undated	box 14
Physical Description: (4 slides)
Clippings--Journalism, 1916-1930	box 10	folder 9
International Paper Co. vs. Jason Rogers, 1917-1918	box 11	folder 1
Print Paper Crisis, 1916-1921	box 11	folder 2
Sound Merchandising Bill, 1918-1919	box 11	folder 3
Pressman's Strike, 1919-1920	box 11	folder 4
Barbour's Reference Rate Service, 1921-1922	box 11	folder 5

Advertising Maps, 1925-1929	box 11	folder 6
Business Publications, 1928-1931	box 11	folder 7
Clippings--Henry Ford, 1927-1930	box 11	folder 8

^ Return to Table of Contents

Series VI: Personal, 1825-1971

Scope and Contents

This series holds documents related to the personal lives and business activities of Jason Rogers and his son, Walter Shillaber Rogers.

Subseries VI.1: Jason Rogers, 1825-1951

Scope and Contents

This subseries holds business papers and clippings related to Rogers's career. It also has some research Rogers conducted into the life of John Dillingham, a nineteenth-century resident of Cape Cod. Dillingham's will of 1825 is also here.

Title/Description	Instances
Clippings--Biographical, 1894-1951	box 12	folder 1
Jason Rogers Photo, circa, 1920	box 12	folder 2
Contracts, 1917-1930	box 12	folder 3
Clippings--Reviews, 1918	box 12	folder 4
John Dillingham, 1825-1929
Will, 1825	box 12	folder 5
Clippings, 1908-1929	box 12	folder 6
Expense Journal, 1900-1925	box 12	folder 7
Jason Rogers Inc., 1924	box 12	folder 8

Subseries VI.2: Walter Rogers, 1919-1971

Scope and Contents

Walter Rogers was an engineer, an advertising executive, and a naval officer. This subseries contains records from his education, business life, and documents a decades-long conflict with the military over his pension.

Title/Description	Instances
Schooling, 1919-1927	box 12	folder 9
Classical High School Yearbook, 1934	box 12	folder 10
Military Records, 1935-1971	box 12	folder 11

Engineering and Patents, 1939-1942	box 12	folder 12
Walter Rogers Photo, circa, 1945	box 12	folder 13
Who's Who in the East , 1952-1954	box 12	folder 14
Typescript--Captain Baker, 1971	box 12	folder 15

^ Return to Table of Contents