History

Professor Marc Raeff (1923-2008) was a prominent historian, writer, and educator. His academic and teaching career spanned nearly four decades, which he divided between Clark University in Worcester, Massachusetts, and Columbia University in New York City.

History

Marc Raeff was born in Moscow on July 28, 1923. His parents were Isaac Raeff, a railroad engineer and an active Menshevik, and Victoria Raeff, biochemist. Marc Raeff's earliest years were spent in Czechoslovakia where Isaac Raeff worked on behalf of the Soviet government. About 1927 or 1928, Isaac Raeff was recalled to return to the Soviet Union, but he decided to move his family to Berlin instead. Marc Raeff received his early education in Berlin. In 1933, the family made another move, this time to Paris. The family lived there until 1941, when they managed to escape to the United States via Portugal.

History

Marc Raeff studied briefly at the City College of New York before he was drafted into the U.S. Army. Raeff, who spoke fluent Russian, German, French and English, served as an interpreter in camps for prisoners of war and displaced persons. After the end of World War II, he attended Harvard University, where he studied history with Michael Karpovich. In 1950, Raeff received his Ph.D. in Russian history and began his own teaching career at Clark University (1949-1960). While at Clark University, Raeff met Lillian Gottesman, whom he married in 1951. The Raeffs had two daughters, Anne and Catherine.

History

Marc Raeff joined the faculty of Columbia University in 1961 and became Bakhmeteff Professor of Russian Studies in 1973. As Bakhmeteff Professor, Marc Raeff trained several generations of historians. The range of his knowledge was legendary and can readily be seen in the titles of his nine books, not to mention the numerous articles, essays and reviews that he wrote in English, French, German and Russian. (He also read Italian and some Polish.)

^ Return to Table of Contents

History

Books by Raeff included Origins of the Russian Intelligentsia (Harvest Books, 1966), which argued that the pursuits of the Russian intellectual class had their roots in the thinking of 18th-century Russian nobility; Understanding Imperial Russia (Columbia University Press, 1985), a history that traces the strains of Russian thought from the 16th century to the 20th; and Russia Abroad: A Cultural History of the Russian Emigration, 1919-1939 (Oxford University Press, 1990), reflecting the history of people like himself who left during the early Soviet era.

^ Return to Table of Contents

History

"He was very much interested in the Western aspect of Russian culture," said Richard Pipes, a professor emeritus at Harvard and the author of A Concise History of the Russian Revolution. "He was a pillar of Russian historical studies in this country." Raeff died on September 20, 2008, in Teaneck, New Jersey.
